

Fig. 4. The interaction between the region and the analyst is shown by plotting fiber diameters (y-axis) of different regions as calculated by various analysts (x-axis). The two main observations that can be seen are (1) each analyst report different diameters pertaining to each measured region and (2) some analysts have a tendency to report significantly larger diameters than the other analysts. Lines are a guide for the eye connecting the same sample from analyst to analyst.